CUB SCOUTING AND YOUR FAMILY

The Cub Scout program helps to meet your child's growth needs. As a boy or girl develops, they have specific developmental needs such as:

- 1 To learn new physical skills. He or she can do this through games, sports, and crafts. As they develop their coordination, they gain a sense of worthiness and acceptance by peers.
- 2 To learn to get along with boys & girls of his same age. He or she needs to form friendships with other cubs. They need to learn how to balance giving and receiving affection if he or she is to relate well with their peers. They need to belong to a group of cubs their own age. Being a part of a Cub Scout den helps fulfill these needs.
- 3 To develop mental processes. Boys & girls can develop mental process by reading, writing, and calculating. They need opportunities to use language to express ideas and to influence others. They must move from a preoccupation with self to understanding how and what others think of them. Opportunities for observation and experimentation will help them learn self-reliance. Den activities and meetings, along with the advancement program, help them develop mentally.
- 4 To develop a value system. He or she is developing a sense of what is right and wrong and what is fair and unfair. They will do this by cooperating with other boys and girls, by being taught, by examples of adults, and from positive reinforcement. They begin to develop democratic social attitudes.
- 5 To develop personal independence. He or she is becoming less dependent on adults. Their same age friends become important to them. In their den, and in the pack, they exercise their independence while learning to get along with others. Your child also needs to belong to a "group" of boys or girls of their own age. This group is a key component of the Cub Scout program. A den is like a neighborhood group of six or eight boys or girls in which they will achieve status and recognition. As you learn more about how Cub Scouting works and what goes on in a den and a pack, you will see that the program helps your child in these five important developmental needs. The uniqueness of Cub Scouting is that you, and the family join the program with your child. You will help your child all along the way.
